From...the top of William Street, King's Cross has projected its Identity up Victoria Street as far as the Slamet Makan Indonesian restaurant, and down as far as the Swiss Inn; up Darlinghurst Road as far as the Tabou near Elizabeth Bay Road; down Macleay Street to the Chevron-Hilton; down Bayswater Road to the All Nations Club; and down William Street to Brougham Street, where Rosaleen Norton used to burn her incense to Pan and Hecate. Perhaps she still does. It is a few years now since I visited Miss Norton's terrace house, but I recall the occasion clearly; it was about 11 a.m. and although bright sunlight was slanting through the leaves of the plane-trees downstairs, the Norton living-room was kept dark with heavy drapes. Against one wall stood an altar decorated with a painting of Pan, a set of stag's antlers, a red cactus flower in a brass urn, a cobra's head candlestick holder, and a few blobs of candle grease from the last ritual. The name Uriel had been chalked in several places on the wall. 'I must take those off,' said Miss Norton apologetically. They were put up for a particular operation – an invocation.'
